SAMF OLD THING

A woman gets tired of wearing the same cloth or silk dress day after day. The color distracts them. Just think what we could do for her in a case like this. We dye cloth and silk dresses beautifully and at a very reasonable price. We also dye laces and trimmings to harmonize with any color or scheme. You will like our work. PROBLEMS OF THE FARMER

How They are Being Solved By Lectures and Institute Work by the Arizona Agricultural Experiment Station.

Prof. R. J. Forbes, director of the Arizona agricultural experiment station which through supported largely by the federal government is a feature of the territorial University at Tucson, was in Phoenix yesterday and though he was seeking no publicity he was as he always is, able to talk to good purpose in the line of his work. He says the station officers have just completed a two weeks series of farmers' institute lectures in Graham county, holding meetings in Safford, Thatcher and other upper Gila valley towns. The subjects dealt with were alkali dairying, Johnson grass, etc.

Another series of lectures will be held about the line of the Southern Pacific railroad between Casa Grande and Yuma where the subjects developed will be relative to the pumping of water for irrigation purposes. In this connection Mr. Forbes said there will undoubtedly come a time when the development and utilization of small reservoir sites will be a topic of great interest in this state.

In the course of time when irrigation is developed here as it is now in Southern California there will be hundreds of small independent projects of great aggregate importance to the state.

Following the series of discussions last referred to will be another series of institute lectures along the Santa Fe line including Wickenburg, Prescott, Winslow, Holbrook, Snowflake and St. Johns. These lectures will deal chiefly with dry farming, orcharding and alfalfa growing. A two weeks' institute course will also be held in Snowflake for the benefit of the students of the Snowflake academy. "We are also holding short courses in agriculture in Mesa, Tempe and Phoenix," said Prof. Forbes.

"And if the funds permit we hope to run a second series of Farmers' Institutes through this valley in March or April."

"Farmers' Institute work has in recent years proved very popular and is a means whereby the Arizona agricultural experiment station brings the results of its experimental work to the farmers and secures their practical application."

FASHIONS OF SPRING.

NEW YORK, Jan. 31.—Really any fashion letter written these days should be penned from Palm Beach in the United States or the French or Italian Riviera, for the best of the new styles are to be found at the winter resorts of Europe and America. The metropolitan dress-makers have done their work and have left the task of displaying their productions to an admiring world, to the women who have the honor to be leaders in the world of dress.

Although there are hosts of pretty winter frocks and wraps in the shops, one hears nothing but spring talk when the topic is clothes. And one can not talk of muslins, silks, laces, cloths and linens very long, without putting a very decided emphasis upon borders, for it is borders, borders everywhere. This is the one bold, strident note of spring fabrics. Some of these so-called borders, to be sure are so wide that they less real edges of trimming than a combination of two kinds of material or two color schemes, or a plain and a figured pattern for combination in costumes.

A conspicuous member of cotton departments is a chiffron texture that has a cotton ratine border which makes a striking contrast between the sheer and opaque weaves. This ratine border comes in stripes or solid colors. Another new cotton fabric has a plain ground with a border made up of an embroidered weave that looks more than anything like the humble Turkish towel. Many of the new borders are in brocade patterns, even in cottons, following, though afar off, the richer silks and velvets. In silks there are hosts of border schemes, many of them striking in color and pattern, and one must not by any means forget the possibilities of silk fringe when considering border effects.

And of silk fringe, the ends of which are very deep are often combined with narrow border effects that are weaved into the material of the dress. Again a charming way of utilizing fringe is in connection with bands of rich lace insertion, the designs of which are outlined in silk threads. Of course, all this multitude of borders that have come in for spring and summer gowns means that the tunic and overskirt are to continue in vogue, for the border is especially useful in outlining the edges of the skirt and waist draperies.

As to skirt draperies, one of the leading Paris dressmakers has brought out during the last few weeks a panther gown that is extreme in style and far from graceful in outline. This gown is usually made of soft satin or silk and has a very scanty skirt which falls in closely around the feet, while the panthers, which are placed at each side of the front, make the hips very large by contrast. The Paris makers have a way, especially at this season, of bringing in some freak fashion which detracts the minds of the multitude and especially of rival makers from the designs which they are busying themselves about for the spring. No style which comes out before the middle of February can be relied upon to give even the faintest hint of spring styles, although it must be admitted that there seems to be little danger or hope that the styles will change very radically. It is probable that new materials which are exclusive with the best makers are always ushered in at the beginning of the spring and fall seasons, but these cannot be for the multitude which depends upon dress goods counters until next fall.

The story of spring and summer fabrics for the shopper is pretty well told now. There are many new models in linen and silk that attract attention, and will look pretty when ever in the season they are worn.

Particularly chic is a linen frock showing which way the sartorial breeze is blowing at the minute. It is combined with one of the embroidered borders and finished with buttons. Borders are being used in many ways unusual to them when they were in fashion many years ago. Not seldom a border makes the underskirt belong a long tunic or makes an entire waist. Buttons are to continue popular in finishes and trimmings. And buttons more lovely than ever are coming in for such uses.

Returning to the subject of fringe, before finally leaving our talk on borders, some splendid linen frocks are made up with fringe combined with lace headings and insertions to produce the border effect. An example might be given of a separate-colored linen—or a cardinal, since cardinal is all the rage for spring—with a plain skirt gauged to a slightly raised bodice. The skirt is quite straight in its lines, and at the bottom there is a band of heavy embroidery, finished with a deep fringe of rose-colored linen threads, with the knotted heading of the fringe quite as wide as the bordered band. This fringe does not fall over with the hem of the skirt, but stops about two inches from the edge.

The waist has a band of the fringe set just about the waistline and the round neck, which is not too low to be worn without a gaiter, is also finished with the embroidery and fringe. The sleeves are trimmed with bands of embroidery, sans fringe.

Some very dainty and separate waists emphasize the new border effects and the borders are designed in such a way that they suggest independence of any other decoration. One seems to know at a glance that the waist is a separate affair, with absolutely no connection with any other part of the toilette, and there is nothing to expect in the way of a connecting link between blouse and skirt, so complete is the pattern of the border on the independent waist and the manner in which it is handled by the best dressmakers.

Cotton voiles that are plain, striped, embroidered and bordered are leading among the incoming cottons. The embroidered voiles in allover big eyelet patterns and in solid designs are selling at from 38 cents to $2 a yard.

If one is to judge from the fashions and the Palm Beach models which are their American prototypes, the popular one-piece short frock is to remain the cornerstone of the foundation of women's wardrobes. It appears in all the spring and summer materials in a host of models conforming to familiar types, but each with its own individual note.

Belts are details of a good many of the most successful series of the season, and even of the sheer frocks, kid, suede, patent leather and leather trimmed brock material all being used. The leather belt is usually at the normal waistline and more often narrower than wide, though soft wide belts of fine leather are seen in white and in colors. Black patent leather, repeating a note of black in buttons, cravat or heels, is the color which is the thing most frequently repeated in the narrow belts. A new cotton or possibly linen material called Ottoman cloth is, as the name implies, a heavily corded material, differing from the wide wale plaques in that the cord is rounder. This material is in alternating cords of white and color and is exceedingly effective in white and grey, white and rose and white and dull blue.
